Greetings,

I hope everyone stayed warm during these cold winter months and that this newsletter finds everyone well. I wanted to update everyone on things that will be happening in the coming months.

First, I am sad to inform you that WVAD no longer has a contract with ClearBlue. This was a decision made by ClearBlue which has affected all contracts with all states. This means that WVAVRS is no longer affiliated with WVAD. People can still make calls using WVAVRS until February 1, 2011. After that, WVAVRS will no longer work.

WVAD’s Executive Board will be attending the Deaf Tech Fair in Charleston, WV on June 12, 2010, which is hosted by WVCDHH. Come and see us at our booth there.

On August 7, 2010, WVAD will be hosting our Biannual Picnic at Bulltown Campground at Shelter #5. WVAD will provide the meat. Please bring a covered dish. There will be Corn Hole Tournament, Horseshoe Tournament, and water games. Come join us for a day of fun and campout with us that night, too. Keep an eye out for our flyer for more information.

The Board is working hard to plan your next conference which will take place in Charleston, WV, in 2011. Continue to check our website, www.wvad.org, and newsletter for more information and updates.

In closing, WVAD’s next Board Meeting will be on April 3, 2010, at 11:00 a.m. in Ripley, WV. Anyone is welcome to stop by to observe and see what’s going on with WVAD.

Sincerely,

Linda Phillips (Eckhart)

WVAD Board Minutes

West Virginia Association of the Deaf Board Meeting, Conference Room – WVSD Administrative Building, Romney, WV, October 4, 2009

Standing Committee Members: John Burdette and Caryn Keller.

The regular meeting of WVAD was held in the conference room at the West Virginia School for the Deaf Administrative Building, on Sunday morning, at 10:17 a.m. The minutes of the August 9, 2009 meeting was approved as read.

Treasurer Veronda Harrison gave the financial reports. As of September 30, 2009, the balance in the checking account was $1,105.10; savings account - $7,051.38; Mingo County Fund - $15,063.86, and 2 certificates of deposits - $12,003.63.

President Eckhart reported that an e-mail was sent to all officers asking them to choose two delegates to attend the NAD Leadership Training Conference (NLTC) to be held at Hyatt on Capitol Square in Columbus, Ohio. Six out of seven board members chose Liz Leisure and Linda Eckhart to attend the conference.

She reported that Ruby Losh has announced at the Romney Fire Hall Deaf Social on Saturday night (October 3, 2009) that the West Virginia School for the Deaf Alumni Association (WVSDAA) and WVAD will work together on making plans for the WVSD’s 140th year anniversary to be held in September 2010.

She reported that Danny Barrett from Sprint Relay Service, as well as John Burdette, expressed their interest in becoming partner with the WVAD to promote the new WV Relay Service. She was informed that Sprint is no longer sponsoring the ASL films.

Vice-president Jimmy Harrison stated that he has received a complaint via e-mail that a person has been giving out his business cards to advertise his interpreting services. That person is not a certified interpreter.

Secretary Liz Leisure reported that she has answered several e-mails that were sent to the WVAD webpage.

None of the three trustees have anything to report at this time.

Tami Kapaldo is the new WVAD Editor. She discussed the need to set new rates for ads for advertisement in the WVAD newsletters.

Caryn Keller, Chairperson for the Deaf Youth Program, reported that since March 2009, she met with several teachers for the deaf and hard of hearing to review and discuss the educational interpreting guidelines. She asked that the wording on the membership form be changed by removing “the Deaf Pageant” and adding “the Youth Program” when requesting donations. If there should be any interest from girls to compete in the Deaf Pageant, the money from the Youth Program can be used for that purpose.

John Burdette has nothing new to report on the DDLEOS project. He is still working on it.

He spoke on behalf of Ruby Losh, Chairperson for WVTRS, who was not able to attend the board meeting today. He said that Ruby is developing a new complaint form for the relay service.

He announced that there is a new website for WV Relay Service – www.westvirginiarelay.com. West Virginia Relay and Sprint Relay partner to provide free accessible service for all citizens and visitors of West Virginia.

President Eckhart was informed by Robyn Evans, Chairperson for CSDVRS, that she has received two checks from CSDVRS in the amount of $325.00 each. A contract renewal is due in November 2009.

President Eckhart announced that WVAD has a new group page on Facebook that was developed by John Burdette.

Unfinished Business:

We need to start working on preserving the old program books and newsletters that are stored in boxes in the storage building. We also need to sort through other boxes and decide what to keep or destroy. Caryn Keller has volunteered to fix any old pictures that we want to keep at no charge to WVAD. President Eckhart has appointed (See WVAD Board Minutes ... page 20)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- Anthony Mowl, the former assistant vice president of business development for Viable Communications Inc. (Viable), and Donald Tropp, the former human resources manager for Viable, pleaded guilty today to engaging in a conspiracy to defraud the Federal Communications Commission's (FCC) Video Relay Service (VRS) program of more than $2.5 million, announced Assistant Attorney General Lanny A. Breuer of the Criminal Division.

Today, Mowl, 25, and Tropp, 25, pleaded guilty before U.S. District Court Judge Joel A. Pisano in Trenton, N.J., to conspiracy to commit mail fraud. Mowl and Tropp were indicted on Nov. 19, 2009, along with Viable's president, John T.C. Yeh; Viable's vice president of corporate strategy, Joseph Yeh; and the Viable corporate entity.

In pleading guilty, Mowl and Tropp admitted that beginning in approximately fall of 2007 and continuing through approximately January 2009, they conspired with others to pay individuals to make fraudulent VRS phone calls using Viable's VRS service. According to the pleas, John and Joseph Yeh paid Mowl and Tropp who would then pay people for using Viable's VRS service. Mowl and Tropp kept a portion of the payments for themselves and distributed the remainder to the paid callers. Viable then caused the submission of fraudulent call minute claims to the FCC, causing the FCC to pay those claims at a rate of approximately $390 per hour for each of the VRS calls that it processed.

According to the indictment, VRS is an online video translation service that allows people with hearing disabilities to communicate with hearing individuals through the use of interpreters and web cameras. A person with a hearing disability who wants to communicate with a hearing person can do so by contacting a VRS provider through an audio and video Internet connection. The VRS provider, in turn, employs a video interpreter to view and interpret the hearing disabled person's signed conversation and relay the signed conversation orally to a hearing person. VRS is funded by fees assessed by telecommunications providers to telephone customers, and is provided at no cost to the VRS user.

According to information contained in the plea documents, Mowl and Tropp admitted that their role in defrauding the FCC's VRS program led to a total of between $2.5 million and $7 million in fraudulent billing to the program. At sentencing, both Mowl and Tropp face a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison, a fine of $250,000, as well as mandatory restitution and forfeiture. A sentencing date has not yet been set by the court.

Co-defendants John T.C. Yeh, Joseph Yeh and Viable are scheduled to stand trial on the charges in the indictment on May 24, 2010. An indictment is merely an accusation, and defendants are presumed innocent until and unless proven guilty at trial beyond a reasonable doubt.

In addition to the indictment charging the Yehs, Mowl, Tropp and Viable, five indictments were unsealed on Nov. 19, 2009, charging an additional 22 people with engaging in a scheme to steal millions of dollars from the FCC's VRS program. The indictments charge owners and employees of the following six companies with engaging in a scheme to defraud the FCC's VRS program:

- Master Communications LLC, of Las Vegas;
- KL Communications LLC, of Phoenix;
- Mascom LLC of Austin, Texas;
- Deaf and Hard-of-Hearing Interpreting Services Inc. (DHIS), of New York and New Jersey;
- Innovative Communication Services for the Deaf Corp. (ICSD), of Miami Lakes, Fla.; and
- Deaf Studio 29 of Huntington Beach, Calif.

These cases are being prosecuted by Assistant Chief Hank Bond Walther and Trial Attorney Brigham Cannon of the Criminal Division's Fraud Section. The cases are being investigated by FBI's Washington Field Office, the U.S. Postal Inspection Service and the FCC Office of Inspector General.

Schools mark anniversary
Deaf students perform patriotic songs for legislators
by Ry Rivard, Daily Mail Capitol Reporter

STATEHOUSE NEWS
Thursday March 4, 2010
CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Lawmakers wiggled their fingers and twisted their wrists to applaud students from the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and the Blind.

About 25 students visited the House of Delegates chamber Wednesday to commemorate the deaf and blind school’s founding by the Legislature 140 years ago.

Deaf students from the school’s high school choir Tapestry opened with a sign language medley of patriotic songs. While lawmakers heard music, they watched the students sign “America the Beautiful” and the National Anthem.

The music ensemble’s director Barry Nealis said putting songs into American Sign Language becomes complicated and there is a point where what the students sign is not exactly the lyrics to the song.

So, to keep up with “O beautiful for spacious skies, For amber waves of grain,” the students couldn’t sign the words exactly.

“Instead we presented the sky as big,” Nealis said.

Senior Roddy Stickley, 18, had his own troubles getting the song down. As a left-handed signer, he had to adapt all the gestures, which were designed for right-handers.

Following Nealis, then, became a bit like looking in the mirror for the southpaw.

“When I first started, it was confusing, but now it’s become normal,” Stickley said.

Blind and deaf students from the school’s Mountaineer Melodies elementary choir also sang and signed “You’re a Grand Old Flag.”

Sixth-grader Tyler Greene, 11, who can see but has to read large print material, said he’s always liked to hum, but he doesn’t plan to become a musician.

He’s more interested in studying math and science to become an architect.

“That’s where I think I could use my imagination the most,” Greene said.

The schools for the deaf and blind were formed on March 3, 1870. Before the school had its first class in the fall of that year, blind and deaf students in the state were “practically deprived of adequate educational opportunities” and had to cross state lines for school or suffer here, according to a citation the House passed Wednesday.

The schools, which work together, have grown from an initial class of 30 students to now serve 170 students at its campus in Romney and several hundred more across the state through extension programs.

Gov. Joe Manchin came to the House to watch and congratulate the students.

As “O’er the land of the free and the home of the brave,” blared over the audio, the students pumped their biceps to sign “brave.”

Then legislators put their hands at their sides and waved their hands by rotating them at the wrist. In American Sign Language, that means applause.

School Marks Anniversary
The West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and Blind will celebrate its 140th anniversary in just a few days. The school’s 161 students live on campus. Back in the 1960s and early 1970s, the school typically had between 350 and 400 students.

WV Funds
The West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and Blind will get a share of the money going throughout the state to make sure students have access to the Internet. The Romney-based school will get nearly $15,000 of the federal money from the ERate program.

Nursing School Lawsuit
A hearing-impaired nursing student has filed a civil lawsuit for disability discrimination against Marshall University. Alexandra Bertolotti claims the West Virginia school failed to provide her the same assistance the university provided the daughter of State Treasurer John Perdue. Bertolotti missed making the nursing program by only a half percentage point. Her complaint says Perdue’s daughter was given the Dean as her lead professor in two independent study courses and provided opportunities to make up missed assignments. Bertolotti was not given these advantages. Bertolotti also claims the professor ridiculed her hearing difficulties in front of her classmates and questioned why she would even enroll in the University’s nursing program. Marshall is denying any wrongdoing and trying to get the case moved to a different court or dismissed.

Deaf Student Scholarship
A new scholarship at a West Virginia college will provide aid to deaf students. The William Johnson Memorial Scholarship will provide two $1,500 scholarships to Marshall Community and Technical College. William Johnson was denied admission to college because he was deaf. His widow, who is also deaf, cried when she found out about the scholarship in his honor. Johnson lived his life by the motto “Deaf can, yes!”

New Standard in West Virginia
West Virginia will require sign language interpreters in schools to score a three on the Educational Interpreter Performance Assessment starting in July. That standard will increase to 3.5 by 2010. The EIPA rating ranges from 0 to 5. Many school interpreters in the state do not have that level of skill. The interpreters are videotaped and scored by officials in Omaha, Nebraska, at the Boys Town National Research Hospital.

140 Years: Landmark Anniversary For Deaf, Blind School

West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and Blind prepares to celebrate its 140th anniversary and shows how technology is changing the way students learn.

ROMNEY — With the 140th anniversary of the creation of the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and Blind just a week away, one instructor says it’s mind-boggling to think about the changes she’s seen on campus just in her lifetime.

Mary Ennis Kesler, 30, said she sometimes tries to explain to her students just how much cell phone text-messaging, the Internet and other technology have changed life for people with hearing impairments.

“We have access to the whole world now,” said Kesler, a Lewis County native who enrolled at the Romney school in 1984 when she was 4. “Technology has made it so that not being able to hear doesn’t keep a person from doing anything they want to do. There are all these ways to communicate, all these ways to learn. We’re not isolated like before.”

Situated on the same campus, the state’s School for the Blind also is experiencing a revolution in technology with a plethora of devices such as Braille PDAs and laptops equipped with the latest in voice-recognition software.

Despite the tech revolution, the Romney school in many ways approaches its mission in the same way it did in its earliest days, said Patsy Shank, the school’s superintendent.

“It’s about our students and what they need as individuals,” said Shank, a Keyser native who began teaching here in 1981 and became superintendent in mid-2007.

“Technology allows our teachers to teach more effectively and more creatively, there’s no doubt. But what we’re doing now is what we’ve always done -- put to use the most cutting-edge tools we have available so that our students can access information and achieve their highest potentials.”

Priscilla Bohrer, the school’s technology coordinator, said she tries diligently to stretch the technology budget by securing grants wherever possible and also by making careful buying decisions -- typically taking new products on loan and asking students to test them before the school makes a purchase.

“We like the students to give something a try for 30 days and see if it really fits their needs,” she said. “They’re very honest. If something works, they tell me so. If something doesn’t work, typically you’ll see them just not using it.”

Some students ride a bus to school from within Hampshire County or neighboring communities, but most of (See 140 Years ... page 7)
By allowing people with hearing impairments greater access to every aspect of modern life, technology has opened doors to a range of occupations and aspirations, Kesler said.

"Before, if you were deaf, you went into a vocation such as printing or clerical work," she said. "Now with so much work being done on computers, there are so many different businesses you can choose from. You can work from home or invent your own business. Before, the number of options was limited, like a pinpoint. Now it's wide, wide open."

In the classroom, technology gets students excited about what they're studying in class, boosts their understanding and allows more give and take as opposed to her giving a lecture and the students sitting and listening, Kesler said.

Kesler, who teaches at the elementary level, is devoted to her “smart board,” which allows her to use her laptop to quickly project photos, drawings, and text onto a display board and then manipulate the images with a pen, finger, or other device.

Because students with hearing impairments depend more on their sense of vision, it's a huge learning boost to be able to quickly offer an image to help a student understand a new concept, Kesler said.

Mike Coleman, principal for the elementary School for the Deaf, said Kesler and other teachers make the latest technology an everyday part of the classroom.

"Years ago, if you were reading about Texas and the text mentioned an armadillo, a student would naturally want to know what an armadillo looks like," he said. "So the teacher would have to go to an encyclopedia, flip through to find the entry and maybe there'd be one small, black and white illustration. Now you can find photos, multiple photos of armadillos. You can video showing armadillos actually digging. You have that instant visual and all the other information you could possibly want, literally right there at the teacher’s fingertips."

A Crisis in Braille?

For Braille users, the technology tsunami of recent years has spawned unease that old-school Braille will become a forgotten way for the blind to read and create written communication.

“It's a huge concern,” said Romney teacher Donna Brown, who learned to read Braille from kindergarten as a student at Overbrook School for the Blind in Philadelphia.

“Like so many things, there's a good side to what technology can do, and there are aspects that can be a bit troubling,” said Brown, who is 50 and joined the faculty at the School for the Blind 27 years ago.

As voice recognition software has become more sophisticated and less expensive, many people with visual impairments rely on such programs to read email, complete paperwork, and handle other day-to-day tasks that require reading and writing.

“When I talk with someone who says he or she doesn't see the need to learn Braille, I ask what they'd do if their technology breaks down,” Brown explained. "How would you even write a note? You've got to be able to use the low-tech method, too.”

Learning Braille also requires mastery of spelling, grammar, and punctuation rules, Brown said.

“If you've written something on your computer through voice, you may not catch an extra space between a period or realize how you should organize sentences into a paragraph," she said.

A recent report from the National Federation of the Blind called the decline in Braille use a crisis, saying just 10 percent of blind school-age children use it as their primary means of reading and writing.

It's been nearly two centuries since Louis Braille, a blind Frenchman, created the method of communication that organizes raised dots into distinct characters.

But in recent decades, Braille instruction has faltered, according to officials with the National Federation of the Blind, because of a shortage of Braille instructors and a belief by some that Braille instruction is no longer a must.

Brown said Braille instruction remains a strict requirement at her school. It can take a couple of years for students to become fluent. Patience and practice are essential, she said.

WV School for the Deaf Boys’ Basketball Team Came in 3rd Place at ESDAA Tournament by Paul See

We traveled to Austine School for the Deaf in Vermont for the ESDAA Boys Division II Basketball tournament held on February 18–20, 2010. Since only 7 teams participated in this tournament, Austine originally invited American School for the Deaf to participate as No. 8 team. Unfortunately, American varsity team had to attend to their ESDAA Division I basketball tournament at Western Pennsylvania. American organized a team consisted of very young boys. This game allowed my bench players to play for the whole game to maintain the competition level between two teams.

We opened up the 1st quarter with the 8–2 lead and never looked back as we maintained the lead, 25–12 at halftime. The score showed 38–16 at the end of 3rd quarter. Final score was WVSD 52 — American JV 42.

Serving Smaller Numbers

When J.D. Corbin began his career teaching high school at the School for the Deaf in 1979, enrollment was large enough to allow the school to field a football team.

“I have the distinction of serving as coach of the school’s last football team,” said Corbin, who has been the school’s principal for 12 years. “That was in 1983. We just didn’t have enough kids.”

In the past five years, the school’s enrollment has ranged from a low of 150 to a high of 175, while in the 1960s and early 1970s, the school typically had between 350 and 400 students, Shank said.

The school’s enrollment has been in decline since the mid-1970s following federal legislation that called for students with visual, auditory, or other disabilities to be taught in their neighborhood schools if they so chose.

Another part of the decline in the school’s student numbers: advances in technology -- cochlear implants, for example, and realizing the detrimental effects of supplemental oxygen on premature infants -- mean fewer children are dealing with vision and hearing losses, Shank pointed out.

Medical breakthroughs coupled with more children with vision and hearing disabilities being mainstreamed in their home school districts likely means the school’s numbers will continue to decline, Corbin said.

He said everyone at the school works hard to ensure students are nurtured and challenged.

“One thing that sets our school apart, that I think is a real advantage to our students, would be all the opportunities for involvement -- and to not only be involved but to be the leaders running the show,” he said.

The school maintains wrestling and basketball teams, a cheerleading squad, clubs such as Future Farmers of America, newsletter and yearbook staffs, and many other extracurricular offerings, he said.

“We have a lot of very devoted alumni, too,” Corbin said. “They sponsor students in various activities and just find ways to stay close to the school. When we have homecoming events or induct athletes in our hall of fame, we always have a lot of our former students come back.”

Doug Godfrey, chairman of the West Virginia Commission for the Deaf and Hard of Hearing and a 1986 graduate of the School for the Deaf, continues to be involved at the school.

Godfrey, who was appointed to the commission by Gov. Bob Wise in 2002, said he looks forward to his weekly visits to Romney, where he has volunteered for a decade in the elementary school’s Shared Reading program.

“I love reading with these kids,” said Godfrey, who works with Unisys computer systems for the IRS. “These children need to develop strong reading and literacy skills because most of them are likely to miss out on language development that come primarily through listening.”

Godfrey, whose roots are in Northfork in McDowell County, attended the school in Romney from age 6. He said he inevitably forms connections with students as he spends time with them.

“Since I am a graduate of the school, young students often asked me what it was like when I was in their situation -- living in the dorm instead of with families, eating cafeteria food, etc.”

Godfrey explained in an e-mail exchange.

He pointed out that nationally, more than 90 percent of deaf children come from hearing families.

“When I get to know students at the school, there is a sense of bond between us that not many of them have with other adults,” he said.

Godfrey said he’s excited to see the school reaching this landmark anniversary.

“I think it is a big deal to celebrate 140 years,” he said. “Deaf and blind schools in other states have either closed or threatened to close or trim services due to budgetary cuts. I think this is one of the reasons the existence of the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and Blind should be celebrated.”

“It’s the only school specifically geared toward the education of deaf, hard hearing, and visually impaired youth in West Virginia.”

The fact that West Virginia has such a school and that it continues to be supported by elected leaders of both political parties, Godfrey said, is something to be “deeply appreciated.”
