Patrick Epperly Hits 1,000, WVSD Sophomore Averaged 41.6 Points per Game

By Ed DeWitt, Review Staff, Hampshire Review, Posted Wednesday, March 26, 2014

Patrick Epperly has joined some rare company for the West Virginia School for the Deaf basketball team. Only a sophomore, he eclipsed 1,000 points in a weather-shortened season and is poised to rise to heights not often achieved on the hardwood.

Epperly, a Slanesville native, scored 541 points in only 13 games this season for an astonishing 41.6 points per game average.

The team lost 7 games to cancellations related to the harsh winter that struck the area. Had those 7 games been played, his totals would be even more inflated.

He is the key offensive weapon for a Lions team that runs only 6 players deep. The lack of numbers allows for an abundance of playing time and Epperly is not shy when it comes to doing what he does best.

His skills allow him to drive the lane with ease, and he is also particularly fond of shooting 3-pointers and foul shots. He is also a gifted defender.

The scoring, however, is what is raising many eyebrows.

“We have had players in the past lead the PVC and the area in scoring,” said WVSD Athletic Director Bob Haines. “From my count Patrick is the 6th or 7th player in recent memory to hit the 1,000-point mark.”

What sets him apart, however, is how quickly he has elevated to that plateau.

Epperly began his career the same way many local children do, playing Biddy Buddy basketball on weekends. He also played 1 year for Romney Middle School when the Lions didn’t have enough players to field an entire team.

He is also a skilled archer and this year qualified for the state tournament in Charleston for the 3rd time. He will head to the Civic Center this Saturday to compete alongside 2 teammates and 2,000 other state students.

The hand-eye coordination skills he has developed have allowed him to excel at both archery and basketball.

This summer, Haines will put Epperly on a conditioning program and also push him to become more efficient with his left hand.

The skills and conditioning, mixed with a likely growth spurt, will make Patrick someone to keep tabs on through his junior and senior years.

Once he graduates, he has hopes to play basketball at Gallaudet University.

Patrick Epperly makes a shot against St. Marys basketball team.

They closed this account on January 15, 2014.
- Received e-mails from NAD about State Association Affiliate Renewal—first reminder on 12/4/13, second reminder 2/19/14, and third reminder on 3/19/14.

Secretary Donna Williams’ Report:

- On October 23-24, 2013, Donna attended the third annual Statewide Independent Living Council (SILC) Policy Summit (meeting) in Charleston representing WVAD. It was a good experience to work with other disabilities groups for a common goal. A report of this was in the winter newsletter.
- On March 27, 2014, Donna received a request from Missy Barie via Facebook asking if WVAD could donate to the Deaf Pink Warrior for WV Komen for Cure. The walk will be on Saturday, May 3, in Charleston.
- Received several e-mails from State Independent Living Council (SILC) asking for volunteers to apply to serve on their board. Since Donna lives in Ohio, she cannot apply. If anyone is interested, see her.
- Received VP call from one person complaining must have a hearing test to apply for the smoke alarm. And, hearing tests are very expensive. Many other state commissions provide smoke alarm free with no questions. Why not WV?

- Donna spent many hours on the internet and VP calling about 20 audiologists. The average price for basic hearing test was $65. Some insurance will pay but many will not. Medicare will pay only with a doctor referral. Saw in newspaper Miracle-Ear will give free basic hearing test. Called several Miracle-Ear stores and yes, they will give free basic hearing test with an appointment. Donna typed a list of all the Miracle-Ear stores within 30 miles of various cities in WV. She wants to get this information out. Gave a copy to Tami Deem for the next newsletter.

- Also, if anyone went to West Virginia School for the Deaf, they can ask them for a copy of the last hearing test.
- Called 15 different places in Weston and Flatwoods for conference rooms to have the WVAD Board meetings. Best are Holiday Inn Express in Weston and Days Hotel in Flatwoods. Other places either do not have a conference room, close early on Saturdays or Sundays, or do not accept reservations. A list of places called was provided.
- Received several e-mails and VP calls regarding the chemical spill in Charleston complaining about the news not being captioned or interpreted. Also received several VP calls after the WVCDHH Community meeting in Charleston on February 28 asking questions about one slide in Executive Director Marissa Sanders’ PowerPoint slides. Donna missed the slide because she was writing notes. After she saw the PowerPoint slides, she understood those questions and called them back to clarify the slide.
- February 28, 2014, attended the WVCDHH Board meeting in Charleston. Seven (7) visitors spoke after the Board meeting. A copy of these comments were sent to Board members.
- February 28, 2014 evening, attended the community meeting in Charleston.
- Regarding Pierre’s position on the Board—Annette Carey told Donna someone on the Board will contact President John Burdette for five (5) names. John said he had not received any request.
- WVAD needs to continue to work with the WVCDHH.

Trustees’ Report: None.

Jimmy Harrison’s Membership Report: Currently have 181 members.

Tami Deem’s Newsletter Report:

Need more news and simplified minutes. The deadline for the next newsletter is June 1st.

April Hottle’s Educational Advocate Report:

- On November 6, 2013, she received an e-mail from John Burdette informing her she was selected to be Educational Advocate for WVAD.
- November 22, 2013—attended the WVCDHH Board meeting in Romney, WV. Learned the West Virginia Department of Education (WVDE) is developing guidelines for educational sign language interpreters and reviewing requirements for them to become paraprofessionals. Also learned that language assessment is NOT part of the WVCDHH Code.
- November 22, 2013—met with Karen Hott, coordinator of the early intervention program through 8 full-time regional outreach specialists. She was told that West Virginia School for the Deaf and Blind (WVSDB) has their own language assessment and they are beginning to work with Gallaudet. She stressed the importance of language fluency for every deaf and hard of hearing child.
- December 2013—sent e-mail to Annette Carey at the WVDE asking her if WVDE will assess the educational interpreters and sign support specialists in the public schools. She told April the interpreters will be evaluated after 2 years.
- January 2014—Dr. Homberg’s office WVDE Office of Special Education, sent April a copy of the Individual Educational Plan (IEP) used for students who are deaf or hard of hearing. A copy of this was given to each board member.
- February 28, 2014—attended the WVCDHH board meeting and community meeting in Charleston. Again, emphasized the need to assess language of those students who are deaf or hard of hearing.

- Learned about the National Early Childhood Assessment Project (NECAP) directed by Dr. Christine Yoshinaga-Itano in Colorado and shared this information with various leaders in deaf education across the state. She was told West Virginia has a small number of deaf and hard of hearing children who would participate in the NECAP assessment. Therefore, the cost to use this program would not be cost efficient.

- Other people April has talked with include Pam Roush, WV Birth to Three/Early Intervention Director and Gwen Bryan and Christina Payne, Hands & Voices. Because of the privacy act and lack of parental involvement it is very difficult to get answers. Feel it is very important for deaf and hard of hearing children to learn ASL and have language from birth. Appreciate WVAD helping with this.

Employees Speak Out Against Deaf and Blind School

ROMNEY, WV — Eleven child care workers at the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and the Blind are upset, saying their jobs are in jeopardy due to their education.

A mandatory meeting was called this week by superintendent Lynn Boyer.

The child care workers, who wished to remain anonymous, said they were under the impression that the meeting was to get input regarding changes on the campus.

“We’ve been told all along that no one would be losing their job,” said one worker.

“Then when we went in to the meeting we were told after 2015 there would be no child care workers.”

The current child care worker position would be phased out on July 1, 2015, and replaced with the position of residential care specialist, according to paperwork handed out at the meeting.

The replacement jobs will require an associate degree in child development, psychology, social work, or related fields, or an employee’s written intention to acquire the degree within three years of being hired.

According to the workers, Boyer said existing child care workers can apply for the new position. They can start taking courses beginning this summer or for the new position. They can start taking courses beginning this summer or for the new position. They can start taking courses beginning this summer or for the new position. They can start taking courses beginning this summer or for the new position. They can start taking courses beginning this summer or for the new position. They can start taking courses beginning this summer or for the new position. They can start taking courses beginning this summer.

Many of the workers say they either can’t afford to take college classes or are too old and don’t feel they could handle going to school again.

Some say they will look into the classes.

“Even if we get a degree, from what we’re told if someone comes in off the street that is blind or deaf they will get the job over us,” a worker said.

Concern for the feelings of the children and length of tenure is also an issue with the workers.

“I don’t know what burns me up the most — losing my job or the suffering of the kids losing people that have cared for them so long,” another worker said.

Other workers said they had been blindsided and lied to. Several have called the union to see what could be done and some say they will have to leave their job and move away from Romney.

Other workers say because of their age they will have to retire.

The workers were given a copy of the new job description that includes a list of general responsibilities, qualifications, functions, and duties.

The recommendation to change from child care worker to residential care specialist will be going before the West Virginia Board of Education on Wednesday.

Boyer said the focus is to improve the quality of the total experience the student has at the schools.

“We focus on improving the educational process of the children in addition to ensuring they are safe and secure,” Boyer said.

“What we are asking of the persons in these new positions is to bring a higher level of knowledge and skills in literacy and math, and a greater understanding of child development, behavior management, impact of deafness or visual impairment on learning and social development, and communication among others.”

Boyer said Eastern West Virginia Community and Technical College has developed classes that would take four semesters to complete and would begin this summer.

“Each of the new positions will get approximately an $8,000 increase from where the child care workers are being paid now,” she said.

“This salary will be applied immediately upon hire. An employee would not have to wait until the degree is completed. The 60-hour program at Eastern is $4,300, but many staff already have course credits which will reduce that cost over time.”

Boyer said Eastern is working on ways to help with tuition and books.

“Experience to date will always have an impact on hiring,” she said. “The work the child care workers have done has not been done for nothing. What they have learned and done in the past will help them when they apply for the job.”

Boyer said because of changes at the campus enrollment is up 20 percent.

“Because of our emphasis on improving education experience of the children, we began to extend instruction into the residential program,” Boyer said.

Boyer said children come to WVSDB behind. “We have to work at every opportunity to progress.”

“We need a skill set in our residential staff that is not necessarily present there now, but we are willing to work over the next three years to make that happen.”

The State Board of Education will meet Wednesday where a discussion regarding the change is already on its agenda.

Another WVSDB issue on the agenda is the 2012-2022 comprehensive educational facilities plan.

Boyer said recently the state legislature chose to transfer WVSDS’s request for $8.4 million to the School Building Authority.

“We are resolving that the SBA will fully fund the proposal,” the resolution said.

The first phase of the proposal is $21 million, which includes construction of the residential cottages on campus and a student center that includes a cafeteria, infirmary, media center and offices for occupational therapists, audiologists and physical therapists.

Schools for the Deaf and Blind to Restructure 40 Positions

CHARLESTON, WV — West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and the Blind will restructure its residential program by eliminating 40 child care worker positions and hiring residential care specialists to replace them by July 1, 2015.

Superintendent Lynn Boyer brought the motion before the state Board of Education Wednesday.

Both child care workers and the new residential care specialists work during non-instructional hours with students who live in the dorms.

The new position comes with an $8,000 pay raise, but at a cost. It requires a degree that most child care workers do not have.

Because residential care specialists will have increased responsibilities, current employees and new applicants will be required to have a degree in child development, psychology, social work, or a related field. If they don’t have a degree, they must commit to obtaining one within 3 years at their own expense.

State Sen. Donald Cookman, D-Hampshire, did not oppose the motion, but expressed concerns that the 40 employees will be displaced.

Cookman asked the board to table the motion so a grandfather clause protecting current employees from losing their jobs could be considered.

Cookman said he doesn’t have a problem with requiring additional education or training as long as employees are guaranteed to keep their job if they pursue a degree.

Current employees may apply for other jobs on campus or be placed into an applicant pool where they will have to interview for the job. Boyer said no one is guaranteed to make it through the process though.

“It’s not my intention to shed people,” Boyer said. “There is value in using the experience and expertise we already have.”

The schools’ child care workers have between 1 and 36 years of experience, but seniority will end when the position is eliminated next year.

While seniority will not be a factor in the hiring process, current employees who are willing to obtain a degree and have previous work experience with students, sign language and braille will have hiring preference over an external applicant with a degree without experience in a residential setting.

A document delivered to the board explaining the new position says there will be no guarantee any current employee will be rehired. It says “the option of hiring the most qualified candidate to work with our students needs to remain open.”

Boyer said it is important to have the best quality employees because they will do more than just “tuck kids in at night.”

She said her goal is to make the school a blue ribbon school of excellence with the finest quality housing children can have.

The changes come after years of neglect, underfunding, and uncertainty whether the school will remain in Romney, Hampshire County.

The board applauded Boyer’s work at the school, saying she has turned it around, but board member Wade Linger said he was not ready to vote on the motion until he had a better understanding.

He asked if the motion could be approved with a stipulation that no one will lose their job if they go through with the training and obtain a degree.

“This is people’s livelihoods,” Linger said.

Board President Gayle Manchin said she sympathized with the employees but encouraged them to pursue a degree. She said it can be scary going back to school later in life but the employees have a support system in place if they do it together.

“They have the support and reassurance that they can do it,” she said. “They have a wonderful opportunity, and as the conversation continues, I think they won’t see this as punitive but as an opportunity to bring more to these children.”

After much deliberation, the board voted to approve the motion.

All of the required general education classes are offered online. The school will work with the Eastern West Virginia Community and Technical College to reopen a computer lab on campus.

The degree’s technical core component will be offered on campus and sessions will be catered to employees’ work schedules. Technical and occupational specialty classes are already offered on campus and are free of charge.

Current employees who apply for the new position and obtain a degree will receive the $8,000 raise. While seniority is no longer considered, the employees’ years of service at the school will remain intact and will be reflected in their pay.

Current pay ranges from $20,000 to $32,000, depending on experience. The new salary range will be $29,000 to $42,000.

The board also discussed the state legislative session, which ended Saturday.

Nothing has been signed into law, but the board is considering asking Tomblin to veto a bill that prohibits principals from requiring a teacher to attend any work-related event during their planning period.

State Superintendent Jim Phares said the bill strips power from principals and diminishes their ability to be effective administrators.

Phares said the board has been asked to do a county-by-county review to see if there will be any costs associated, namely if there will be a need for substitutes to cover a teacher’s instructional time.

He said that need could be offset by a bill from 2013 that includes substitute teaching for at least 3 instructional days as a job duty for all central office personnel except for the superintendent or those without a teaching or administrative certificate.

The bill (Senate Bill 477) completed legislation Saturday. The Senate clerk’s office said the final draft is still under review and should be available by the end of the week.

WV BOE President Speaks on Issues at WVSDB, Manchin says Schools are not Moving

ROMNEY, WV — West Virginia Board of Education President Gayle Manchin responded to issues at the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and the Blind during an interview with the Times-News Wednesday morning.

Manchin confirmed that the state intends to keep the schools in Romney despite concerns of child care workers that Schools Superintendent Lynn Boyer was hired to move the schools.

“We are fortunate to have this quality of schools. It’s a wonderful school,” Manchin said.

“She (Boyer) has made dramatic improvements in terms of raising the bar and looking at the facility.”

Manchin said the schools have not been properly maintained for many years.

“Now everything has to be done at once — repurposing the buildings for the best convenience and safety of the children,” Manchin said.

Manchin said prior to the board meeting in Hampshire County last fall, they looked at options to move the schools because of the financial outlay in some form or another.

“We looked at the best use of money, whether it would have been more financially feasible in another area of the state,” Manchin said.

“We did our research and what we found was it was financially not even close to moving the schools.”

Manchin said Romney is the best location for the schools and that is in large part due to the commitment of the community.

“After the town forum, we felt the community sort of pledged to partner with the schools,” Manchin said.

She said the board was very pleased and thrilled with the attendance and the meeting overall.

“We felt that everyone shared genuine support and caring. It rather alarms me when we hear rumors that we still plan to close the schools,” Manchin said.

Manchin said the planned additional education for child care workers is necessary to give children who undergo 24/7 care the best quality of care possible.

But Sen. Donald Cookman disagrees. “Because of a recently implemented policy at WVSDB, the school is no longer a 24/7 school.”

Cookman said students go home every weekend, which means they are with the teachers roughly the same amount of time they are with their child care workers.

Manchin said that accomplishments have been made following changes in curriculum and the next step is to look at those who care for the children after school hours.

“Which means those care takers should have the highest quality of trained individuals in those positions,” Manchin said.

“These people have to know how to deal with social behaviors, appropriate and inappropriate behaviors.”

Manchin said because someone has been around children for many years does not necessarily mean that person is highly qualified.

The state board has approved the transition of child care workers to residential care specialists to take effect in July 2015.

Child care workers are being asked to take English and math classes to earn an associate of arts degree.

“We will work with these workers for a three-year period. As soon as they sign the papers saying they want to improve their skills, they will receive an $8,000 a year salary increase,” Manchin said.

Cookman wonders if that statement is actually correct.

“Can this be true when the job description indicates that individuals who are deaf or those with superior ASL skill will be given preference during the hiring process?” Cookman asked.

“Even if the child care workers agree to obtain the required AA degree ... they would still have to have a successful interview to get the job.

“My question is when would the decision to hire be made, when the applicant agrees to obtain the AA, when they are interviewed or after the AA degree is completed,” Cookman said.

Manchin said the schools are working with Eastern West Virginia Community & Technical College to assist and will be giving classes on the campus and online.

In the interim, the child care workers are asking for a guarantee to retain their jobs.

Anita Mitter, organizational development specialist with the West Virginia Education Association, said, “Having an associate degree doesn’t mean you can do the job.”

Mitter said she and a small group met with Boyer last week to discuss the status of the transition.

“Our sticking point is we feel the current child care workers should be given priority to be chosen for the jobs because of their experience, seniority and commitment to the kids,” Mitter said.

Mitter said the child care position is not a teaching job but a parenting job.

“I do feel that Dr. Boyer is going to try working with us to come up with some way that would be acceptable to everyone,” Mitter said.

There are 35 child care workers’ jobs at stake.

State Declines to Fund Schools for Deaf and Blind Project

By Marla Pisciotta, Cumberland Times-News, http://m.times-news.com/CTN/db_279560/contentdetail.htm?contentguid=axXi8o42&full=true#display, Posted: April 29, 2014 2:00 PM

ROMNEY, WV — Although the West Virginia School Building Authority has declined to provide any funding to the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and the Blind to begin building new residential learning centers, SBA Executive Director Mark Manchin said construction plans are not ditched.

The 2014 proposal request was for $7.1 million with the WVSDB contributing another $750,000.

“I’m disappointed,” Lynn Boyer, superintendent, said.

Boyer said she had several conversations with Manchin last week and was prepared for the decision, but hoped, nevertheless, that a last-minute change would occur.

“That did not happen,” Boyer said in a letter sent to the leadership on the campus.

Boyer said Manchin encouraged the WVSDB to maintain its momentum to implement its Comprehensive Education Facilities Plan.

Manchin said in a phone interview Tuesday morning, “The plan to build is not ditched, just postponed pending funding.”

Manchin said, “What concerns me is some of the individuals complaining the loudest never talk about the benefit to the children. I would never encourage Lynn Boyer to guarantee those jobs.”

Cookman said his goal is that the child care workers who have dedicated their lives to and developed a bond with the students be treated fairly.

Manchin said the board and Boyer are not doing anything different than other schools.

“Most schools are held to a high standard if they have a good superintendent. To expect less would be to say we don’t want our West Virginia children to have the best education,” Manchin said.

Workers Picket at WV Schools for the Deaf and Blind

ROMNEY, WV — Although several meetings have taken place to discuss the employment situation for child care workers at the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and Blind, Sen. Donald H. Cookman, D-Hampshire, and union reps joined workers to picket the schools the morning of April 22.

“We weren’t satisfied with the meeting we had with (Superintendent) Dr. (Lynn) Boyer,” one worker said.

More than a dozen workers have begun walking up and down the sidewalk next to the schools along Rt. 50 in Romney two times a day.

Another worker on the picket line said we just want to make the public more aware of the situation. They should know that we are losing our jobs, she said.

Gayle Manchin, President of the West Virginia Board of Education, recently said she was pleased with Boyer’s progress with the schools. And although union organizer Anita Mitter with the West Virginia Education Association said she thinks Boyer will try to work things out and come up with a solution acceptable to everyone, picketing started. Workers said the decision was made by Mitter.

Cookman joined the picket line to protest the threat of child care workers losing their jobs.

Senator Donald Cook, D-Hampshire, pickets with unidentified staff next to the schools along Route 50 in Romney, WV. Donald's quote: “I'm glad to do it. I believe it is important for all of you, for the school, and the community. Just doing my job. — Don”

Child care workers have been asked to earn an AA degree. Boyer has given them three years to earn the degree and a promise of an $8,000 increase in their annual pay in return.

Manchin said Boyer “is raising the bar for the students, for the faculty, and for the administration” with that decision. The child care workers position will be replaced by “residential care workers” beginning July 2015.

In the interim, child care workers are being asked to take classes in both English and math to begin the work of earning the AA degree. But Cookman said he is concerned the schools will not give the child care workers a chance to retain their jobs. Some workers have been at the schools for more than 25 years.

“Even if the child care workers agree to obtain the required AA degree and no one that is deaf or has superior ASL skills apply for the position, they would still have to have a successful interview to get the job,” he explained.

Cookman said he doesn’t understand why it is necessary to interview an employee for an opening when he or she has been working for the schools for years.

“My question is, when would the decision to hire be made — when the applicant agrees to obtain the AA or when they are interviewed or after the AA degree is completed?” Cookman asked.

“Having an associate degree doesn’t mean you can do the job,” Mitter said. Mitter said she and a small group met with Boyer last week to discuss the status of the transition.

“Our sticking point is we feel the current child care workers should be given priority to be chosen for the jobs because of their experience, seniority and commitment to the kids,” Mitter said.

Mitter said the child care position is not a teaching job but a parenting job.

“I do feel that Dr. Boyer is going to try working with us to come up with some way that would be acceptable to everyone,” she said. “We’re working on it.”

Information About Free Fire Alarms Provided by the WV Commission of the Deaf and Hard of Hearing (WVCDHH) by Donna Williams

Hello! I wanted to let you know that I did some research and called many places about free hearing tests.

I learned that most places charge $60 or more for a basic test. Some insurance will pay part or all and some will pay nothing. Medicare will pay only with a referral from a doctor.

Many people told me they cannot afford the test. Then, one Sunday, I saw in the local newspaper that Miracle-Ear will give hearing tests free. I called most of the places on this list and explained about WVCDHH providing free smoke alarms to deaf and hard of hearing home owners but they need to provide a copy of their hearing test for proof.

I also explained that most of you have been deaf all your lives, do not have copy of test for proof, and cannot afford $60 or more for a simple test. They were all very nice saying “sure, we can give them simple hearing test and a copy of the test free.” I know some of these places are not near your home. If you prefer to go to a local hearing test place, you need to ask them if your insurance will cover it or ask your insurance company.

However, you must call the hearing aid place and make appointment. You cannot just walk in and tell them you need hearing test.

CHEESE TORTELLINI SOUP

My daughter-in-law made this and this is VERY good!! I really enjoyed it!

1 (19 oz) bag of frozen cheese tortellini
2 (14.5 oz) cans of Italian style diced tomatoes, drained
1 block (8 oz) of cream cheese (softened)
3-4 cups of chicken broth (start with 3, add 1 more if it looks like it needs it)

Brown the sausage (she used pork sausage with sage) and drain when done. Put all ingredients together except the tortellini and cream cheese. Let it simmer for 30-40 minutes. Add the cream cheese and tortellini, cook until tender, 10 minutes. Serves 4-6.

* Keep an eye on your tortellini, it may be done sooner.
* For a vegetarian version, omit sausage and use vegetable broth instead.
 If you use neufachtel (1/3 fat of cream cheese), be prepared that it doesn't melt as well and leaves little curds.

PEANUT BUTTER CUSTARD BLAST

My daughter-in-law’s sister made this for Memorial Day cookout and this was very good!

Crust:
2 cups cream-filled chocolate sandwich cookie crumbs or Oreo cookie crumbs
2 Tbsp sugar
1/3 cup butter, melted

Filling:
1-1/2 cups sugar
2 Tbsp all-purpose flour
6 cups 2% milk
1 cup creamy peanut butter
1/3 cup cornstarch
1/2 tsp salt
6 egg yolks, beaten

Topping:
2 cups heavy whipping cream
1 Tbsp confectioners’ sugar
1/2 cup chopped salted peanuts
2 Tbsp chocolate syrup

Preheat oven to 375°. In a small bowl, combine cookie crumbs and sugar; stir in butter. Press onto bottom of a greased 13x9-inch baking dish. Bake 8 minutes or until set. Cool on a wire rack.

For filling, in a large saucepan, combine sugar, cornstarch, flour, and salt. Stir in milk until smooth. Cook and stir over medium-high heat until thickened and bubbly. Reduce heat; cook and stir 2 minutes. Remove from heat. Stir a small amount of hot mixture into egg yolks; return all to pan, stirring constantly. Bring to a gentle boil; cook and stir 2 minutes.

Remove from heat. Stir 1 cup into peanut butter until smooth. Gently stir peanut butter mixture into the pan. Pour over crust. Cool to room temperature. Cover and refrigerator at least 2 hours.

In a large bowl, beat cream until it begins to thicken. Add confectioners’ sugar; beat until stiff peaks form. Spread over peanut butter mixture. Sprinkle with peanut butter cups and peanuts. Drizzle with chocolate syrup.

To Make Ahead: After peanut butter custard is poured over the crust, refrigerate overnight. Before serving, top with the sweetened whipped cream, peanuts, peanut butter candy, and chocolate drizzle.
